

Didi's Cheng Wei: Chinese patriot who tamed Uber

Cheng Wei, 34, was once assistant to the head of a foot massage firm. Last week, his company Didi Chuxing bagged Uber's China business in a deal valuing his ride-hailing start-up at $35 billion - a second success in as many years in a gruelling battle with a rival. Investors and Didi staff say

Cheng has a cool head, a keen strategic eye and a lack of ego - all pivotal in taking on and beating Uber in a two-year, multi-billion-dollar scrap for China's competitive ride-hailing market.

But his leadership style is also cut-throat and tinged with nationalism, say some of those who know him. He often references China's history and military in his speeches.

He will be closely watched now as he looks to turn his vast, money-losing ride-hailing company into a meaningful business. Chinese media have reported that Didi users and drivers fear the company's virtual monopoly will mean pricier rides and lower wages.

"He's probably one of the fastest growing CEOs I've seen. If not the best then definitely one of the top three, and I back a lot of people," said Hans Tung, managing partner at GGV Capital, which has funded Beijing-based Didi.

Cheng, who favours rectangle-framed glasses and polo shirts, also has an astute eye for talent - such as hiring foreign-educated rainmaker and ex-Goldman Sachs banker

Jean Liu - and managed Didi's relationship with major investors Alibaba and Tencent, who are bitter internet rivals, say those who have worked with him.

"From the outside, you'd say this guy is really lucky, but on the flip side, he knows who the right people to know are and who to have good relationships with, and how to get them to work with him," said a person who has worked with and advised Cheng for years. "It's a very unique personality trait."

Cheng was born in 1983 in a small town in the southeastern province of Jiangxi.

When the time came to sit China's demanding university entrance exams, he was ill but did enough to get into Beijing University of Chemical Technology, said Allen Zhu, managing director of GSR Ventures and an early investor in Didi. A graduate in Administration, Cheng took a job at a healthcare company, but found it wasn't quite what he had expected. "He was an assistant to a chairman at a foot massage company," said Zhu. "He thought it wasn't interesting, and after about a year he applied to join Alibaba as a sales person."

In six years, Cheng rose to being a sales manager for the north of China, before moving to the e-commerce group's online payment arm, Alipay, where he was deputy general manager.

In 2012, he founded Beijing Orange Technology Co and launched Didi Dache - meaning "Beep Beep Call a Taxi" - the initial incarnation of his ride-hailing service.

The following year, Didi had its first run-in with Uber, but as a potential suitor rather than a rival.

Uber co-founder and chairman Garrett Camp was in China at the time Didi was having a second round of fundraising, recalled GGV's Tung, who was then at Qiming Venture Partners and introduced the two parties.

"I encouraged Uber to invest in Didi because China's not an easy market to crack, but it was too early for Uber," he said.

Instead, Tencent funded

Didi in mid-2013, helping spark a grinding war against Alibaba-backed rival Kuaidi Dache. Both threw hundreds of millions of dollars into subsidising rides for passengers and giving drivers bonuses to gain market share.

Micromax extends the success of its Canvas Unite 4 series

Micromax Informatics, India's largest domestic handset manufacturer and world's 10th largest handset maker today announced a new addition in its hugely successful regional language based Canvas Unite Series- Micromax Unite 4 Plus. The newly launched smartphone will come with the upgraded Indus OS 2.0, world's first regional OS and 2nd most popular OS in India. The Indus OS 2.0 was available for the first time on Micromax's two recently launched smartphones- Unite 4 and Unite 4pro. With the upgraded Unite series smartphones, Micromax is aiming at targeting 300 million first time smartphone users in India who are willing to move to smartphones over the next 3 years but haven't because they are uncomfortable using a smartphone in English.

Micromax has been a pioneer in addressing this language barrier by providing regional language support in the smartphone ecosystem with its Unite series. The Unite series is the most successful range grossing over 2.5 million units in sales till date. The new Canvas Unite 4 series with an upgraded Indus OS 2.0 has been a huge success with its two previous models Unite 4 and Unite 4 Pro. And with the launch of Unite 4 Plus, Micromax will make the new smartphone with upgraded OS and better specifications available to offline consumers. The upgraded Indus OS 2.0 offers a complete smartphone ecosystem in 12 regional languages and is packed with unique patented features such as Indus Swipe, hybrid keyboard, Text-to-Speech, App Bazaar- Indus' regional language app marketplace, and more to offer a convenient and easy smartphone experience.
